Henry was just about ten years old when his father died from an accident. His mother found it hard to provide him with what a normal family could do. Still, she decided to send her child Henry to a well-known school like other children.

The other day, Henry wanted a grammar book in order to join a class. However, the book was so expensive that his mother couldn't afford it.

Henry was very upset about this and went to bed with a heavy heart, thinking what could be done to get the book.

As soon as he woke up in the morning, he found that a heavy snow had fallen and the cold wind was blowing hard. The street became so icy that some little children fell on it. To his surprise, no children cried or just lay on the street waiting for help. They all tried their best to stand up and kept walking. What he saw really touched his heart.

"Every problem brings a difficulty for someone," he said to himself, "Maybe it is time for me to get back on my feet like them."

He ran quickly to his neighbor's house and offered to clean the snow in the yard. His offer was accepted. After he finished his work and received his pay, he went to another neighbor and did the same thing. Then he went to several other houses until he had enough money to buy the grammar book. When school began, Henry was in his seat, there the happiest boy, ready to begin studying with his new book.
